

Written by Administrator

Wednesday, 13 January 2010 19:40

Is anyone like the Cha Dango that I shared on previous post?

Now, I would like to introduced another type of dango. As I mentioned before, there are varieties of dangos that can be found in Japan, one is the Cha Dango which is made with green tea. The second type of dango that I am going to share now is black and white version of dango. What is the black and white ball ball stick shown in the picture? Well, the white balls are the dangos which are plain dangos while the blacky is kuro goma (black sesame). It doesn't look tempting to me at all, but since there was a free tasting sample, why should I miss the chance 🍡

after free tasting

.....Mmmnnn, it tasted good, the kuro goma was melted in my mouth and the mixture of "Q-Q" dango that I like so much were perfect match. After ate the free sample, even though it was delicious, we do not buy it. We do not want to carry it to other places as we were heading to other destination. On that day, we just bought one stick at store outside the temple for about 100yen per stick, thinking to get a box of goma dango at other station in Kyoto. Well, shopping in Japan is like playing an auction game. Once you spot the thing you like, you should get it immediately. If you don't, you might lost the thing you want FOREVER! Yes, we were regretted for not buying on the spot. We do not see the goma dango anywhere else. Was really dissapointed.

Written by Administrator

Wednesday, 13 January 2010 19:40

Kira...malam... I realised that I have not introduce the place we ate the goma dango... that
...muaakks muaakkksss... 🍡

Written by Administrator

Wednesday, 13 January 2010 19:40

Kinkakuji temple at Kyoto